

Google Picasa is an excellent (free) program to help organise, browse and 'quick fix' edit your digital photos. With commonly used features such as red eye removal and cropping etc, it saves a great deal of time compared to running a full blown program like Photoshop to do a simple quick edit.

It has many other features such as compressing photos for email and a very simple to use option to download images directly from your digital camera or any other USB or FireWire type device such as a flash drive etc.

It's a lot of fun and has been updated with new functions since the original version so even if you have used it for a while, it's wise to have a look around for the new tricks the new versions add.

If you are on broadband (or at least connected to the internet) Google Picasa checks your version and automatically updates it if required.

Considering Google Picasa contains no pop up advertisements and it requires no payment and doesn't beg for donations ... I must admit it's one of the must have programs for anyone who has photos on their computer.

On site training for use of this program is available. Click the Button on my website for details of this service if required.
